PUBLISHERS' NOTE

IN 1832, the late George P. Putnam published, under the title of The World's Progress, a cyclopædia of facts and events that had been compiled by himself, and that had originated in notes taken as a guide for his own historical reading. The work was reprinted in successive editions during the ensuing forty years, and the entries were added to and expanded until the three hundred pages of the original issue had developed into a portly volume of twelve hundred pages. A demand continuing through more than a third of a century may be accepted as evidence that the plan of The World's Progress and the material presented in it had been found of service by students of history and by readers generally. The cyclopædia portion of the compilation came, necessarily, to be superseded by works of reference of later origin, and The World's Progress was, therefore, allowed to go out of print. There continued, however, to be demand for the historical tables (the plan of which was, it is believed, original with Mr. Putnam), and since 1870 this division of the work has, with material corrections and additions, been issued in successive editions under the title of Tabular Views of Universal History.

In the edition now presented, while the scheme and arrangement of the original editor have been left unchanged, the entries have been carefully revised and in part rewritten, and the record has been brought down to date. The changes decided upon were in fact so considerable as to necessitate the resetting of the entire volume.

Under the scheme devised by Mr. Putnam (a scheme which made his volume practically unique), the events occurring throughout the world at the same period of time are recorded in parallel columns. This arrangement calls in the powerful assistance of association in enabling the memory to grasp and to retain a hold of important dates by showing at a glance simultaneous occurrences in different countries. It also helps in teaching the lesson that the history of any one nation is only a part of the history of the world, and that the proper way to study history is to trace the relations with each other of the peoples scattered over the face of the globe.

As the wiser instructors do not fail to emphasize, the precise date of an event is in itself a detail of minor importance, which has value chiefly in serving to trace its relations to other events and in indicating the influence of one upon the other. The student, for instance, who reads that, in 1492, under the patronage of Isabella of Spain, Columbus accomplished his historic voyage to the Western Hemisphere, may properly be interested in noting, by carrying his eye across the columns of two pages, what rulers were at that time in control of other European States, some one of whom might possibly have secured for his own realm the prestige of the great discovery. In like manner, it is essential for a right understanding of the Protestant Reformation of the sixteenth century, for the student to keep before him the personalities of the monarchs and other leaders of men who were contemporary with Pope Leo X. and with the Emperor Charles V.

The Tabular Views may, therefore, be safely commended to teachers as valuable in the practical work of historical instruction. The tables will also be found of distinctive service for the general reader. The writer of these lines has for many years found an advantage in keeping the volume at his elbow for constant reference in connection either with reading or with writing.

It has been the intention of the revisers, in the several instances in which events or dates have become a matter of controversy, to follow the authorities most generally accepted. It may easily, of course, be the case, however, that an occasional date or statement has been retained which some reader may find ground to question; such a critic can only be referred back to the latest investigators for the authoritative decision that seems to him to be important, and that can not be attempted in a condensed summary such as that in the present volume.

The study of history is, as stated, a study of the relations of events to each other, made with the view of securing, as far as practicable, an understanding of the causation of these events and of the influence exercised upon them by historic characters. For such a study it is believed that The Tabular Views will continue to be found of service by instructors and students, and also by the more painstaking and thorough of the so-called general readers.
